The territory of the Tiklauila is roughly contained in the area in the south of Bathurst Island, south of Point Hurd and west of Mukambrimo, which is a river about eight miles to the west of the mission station. In this area, roughly about two hundred square miles, there are a number of districts with specific names. Anyone familiar with the Australian blackfellow knows how certain districts are given certain names, and although no native can tell the exact boundaries, everyone in the tribe knows when he has come into one of these districts and when he has left it. The principle of differentiation of these areas seems to be upon the basis of the physical aspect of the country, a valley for example having a distinct name from either set of hills surrounding it, a plain being distinguished from a thickly-wooded piece of bushland on its margin, and so on.

These districts play an important part in Tiwi land ownership. Certain districts are not owned by the horde as a whole, but by a single family of that horde. Thus in the horde we are considering, Tayio, the extensive district in the extreme south-western corner of the island around Cape Fouveroy, is owned by a single set of men, all of whom are the son's sons of Mikidjimirla, a man who as far as can be judged died about 1870-1880. The basis of their title is the fact that Mikidjimirla died and was buried in the district, hence all the game and fruit in Tayio belong to them, and cannot be hunted or collected by anyone else without their consent.

The question immediately arises as to whether the mere burial of a man in a district gives his heirs property rights in that district. The Tiwi answer is that it always does if the man was sufficiently important. The man in question here, Mikidjimirla, was from all accounts one who left a deep impression on the society of his time both by his personality and by his prowess in warfare. More than that he left his mark on following generations by the number of children he had. At the present time, there are nine men, all grandchildren of Mikidjimirla, in whom the hunting and fruit-collecting rights of Tayio are vested, and these men and their families normally camp in Tayio and deny the right of other Tiklauila families to hunt there. This group has a solidarity of its own which is expressed by a name Tayiauwila, which is one of the alternative horde-names. It should be noted in this connection that the Tiwi name for father's father is amini, and the members of this group will frequently refer to one another as gia yirt'amini (my "one grandfather") in preference to gi'iwuni (my brother), or gia kalipini (my half-brother), which is the normal term of address.

A member of another horde found trespassing upon the territory of the Tiklauila would be killed immediately unless he had been invited for a corroboree or some such festival. A member of the same horde who, not belonging to the yirt'amini group, trespasses in Tapio would not be put to death, but he and his relatives would become embroiled in a serious quarrel with the group.

Tapio is the best example of this peculiar institution because being in an out-of-the-way peninsula no one needs to go there except people who have a right there. Consequently the Tapiauwila can exercise a much stricter supervision and hence as a matter of fact guard their rights more jealously than the people with such rights over districts that lie upon the main roads of the two islands. Nevertheless the whole of Tiklaru is divided into such districts and the whole of the Tiklauila into such yirt' amini groups.

Thus bordering on the Tapiauwila to the east, we find the Arupula who have similar hunting and food-collecting rights over Arupi, the coastal district in the middle of the south coast of Bathurst Island. The origin of their title is lost in obscurity inasmuch as nobody to-day knows who the ancestor was or exactly where is the grave that gave them such a right. Nor is the Arupula title respected as much as is the Tapiauwila partly because Arupi is crossed by several "high-roads"—notably the only road to Tapio from the east, and the Wrapgwila road to the Mission Station —but even more because the present representatives of the Arupula are either uninitiated youths or peaceful old men.

This introduces what is perhaps the main factor in the perpetuation of this institution—the power of the yirt'amini groups to enforce their rights. The ownership of a particular territory by a horde and the punishment of trespass upon it can always be enforced because there is always a certain number of fighting men in the horde. Hence horde-ownership is respected. In the yirt' amini group, however, periods frequently occur when the group is not strong enough to enforce its claims, and unless the claims are constantly brought under the notice of the rest of the horde they are ignored. The result is that unless the family gets a new lease of life by boys growing up into formidable warriors, such a period is the prelude to the complete lapsing of the title to the district. The prominent part played in this institution by the father's father and the fact that most of the present districts held on such a title are held from the father's father whereas comparatively few are held through an ancestor (necessarily more remote) who has been forgotten, seems to indicate that yirt' amini holdings do not last more than three generations before they lapse for want of sufficient able-bodied men to enforce them.

It must not be imagined that the whole of Melville and Bathurst Islands are divided into such holdings nor indeed that everyone in the tribe belongs to such a group. The main obstacle to this lies in the self-evident fact that if one's father's father dies in the territory of another horde, as must have quite frequently have happened in the days of marauding expeditions between hordes, there can be no such thing as a yirt' amini holding of the district wherein he died. Moreover there are numbers of the Tiwi whose fathers and grandfathers died young, and the essence of the system is that the grandfather should have been old enough to have sufficient male children and grandchildren to enforce the claim.

It can easily be seen from the above how it comes about that each horde has a number of names, since each one of the yirt' amini group-names is liable to be applied to the whole horde merely by adding -ila or -ula to the name of the district they control.

Spencer's list of horde names is at variance with mine, because he did not realize this. Out of six men of the Tiklauwila, one might easily get six different answers to his question as to their "country," each giving the name of his yirt' amini group. It is quite possible that the horde names that are used here—Tiklauwila, Munupula, etc.—are really yirt' amini names that have become extended to include a whole horde either by the identification of a very powerful yirt' amini group with a horde in the eyes of the rest of the tribe or by the former horde name becoming tabu and a yirt' amini name being substituted. This view is strengthened by the fact that in one or two of the hordes, the horde name is still in use as the name of a district. Thus whereas the whole of the territory of the Wilraŋgwila on the north of Melville is technically Wilraŋgu, the native name for Karslake Island, a small portion of that territory, is Wilraŋgu. Similarly Malau is a creek in the territory of the Malauila horde.

A man is born into the horde of his father. Should his father die and his mother be taken by a member of another horde he goes with her, and WHILE THE WOMAN WILL ALWAYS BE LOOKED UPON AS BELONGING TO HER FORMER HORDE, THE CHILD CHANGES HIS, TAKING THAT OF HIS STEPFATHER.
